KLING STUBBINS

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

David W. Esch, AIA, joins KlingStubbins' Washington, DC, office as Senior Project Manager

WASHINGTON, DC – September 5, 2007 – KlingStubbins is pleased to announce that David W. Esch, AIA, has joined the firm as Senior Project Manager in the Washington, DC, office. In this role, Mr. Esch will concentrate on project development and management of the firm's Research and Development and Higher Education work in the Washington metropolitan area.

Mr. Esch's architectural career spans more than 30 years of national experience with concentrations in high technology, research, and higher education projects. Mr. Esch's past projects also include an array of projects for public agencies including the General Services Administration, the Maryland Transit Agency, the City and State of New York, and the New York City Transit Authority. More recently, he served as a project manager for the new Mark O. Hatfield Clinical Research Center on NIH's Bethesda Campus, the Nanofabrication and Science buildings at Duke and Cornell Universities, and as the architectural Project Director for Maryland's largest public-private transit / joint development project, the Paul S. Sarbanes Silver Spring Transit Center.

"Dave is an extraordinary addition to our Washington leadership team," commented Pascal D. Pittman, AIA, Managing Director of KlingStubbins' Washington, DC, office. "We look forward to the specialized expertise Dave will bring, and his leadership in the R&D and Higher Education sectors will provide an added dimension to the talented leadership group that KlingStubbins has established in our Washington office. We all look forward to collaborating with Dave and benefiting from his advanced knowledge in the industry and its practices."

David Esch is an alumnus of Cornell University with a Bachelor of Architecture degree. His work has been recognized by a GSA National Design Award, a New York City Art Commission Award for Design Excellence, and a New York City Landmarks Conservancy Award for design excellence and historical preservation.
